Paul and Ancient Rhetoric: Theory and Practice in the Hellenistic Context deserves commendation for the outstanding number of classical sources it brings to bear on the topic under consideration and for the breadth of methods illustrated in the papers assembled by Porter and Dyer. While some approaches will be considered less persuasive than others, the volume as a whole serves well to illustrate both the strengths and the limitations of a discipline which has come of age.

By applying a 'rhetoric-of-crisis' approach to Galatians, Nina E. Livesey convincingly shows that Paul uses similar rhetorical strategies as other ancient authors involved in polemical discourses, which has far-reaching consequences for how to understand Paul's use of dichotomies and exaggerations as well as his relation to Judaism.

Paul De Man--The Rhetoric of Temporality. De Man structures his essay around a discussion of allegory and symbol. Along with allegory and symbol, he builds his argument on an opposition of transcendence and finitude, eternity and temporality. In a departure from the then- and still-usual analysis of the Romantics, De Man insists that theirs was an art of allegory, not an art of symbol.

One might add that the study of rhetoric and the detection of rhetorical strategies in Paul and, indeed, in all New Testament texts (my own concern), is essential. To borrow from Jerome, to be ignorant of rhetoric is to be ignorant of text. There are two areas of concern, - concern, that is, for the ubiquitous common reader.
