“Shared decision making is a key component of patient-centered health care,” according to the ONC. “It is a process in which clinicians and patients work together to make decisions and select tests, treatments and care plans based on clinical evidence that balances risks and expected outcomes with patient preferences and values.”

3 Best Practices for Shared Decision-Making in Healthcare

Regarding the problem of how to arrive at a wise decision in a morally complex situation, it is common standard in bioethics to use a framework with four phases. If patients are competent, they should be adequately informed and decide for themselves. If they are incompetent, an advance directive might be helpful.
